The Charleston Mercury. The Unarrosson and the opening of Brown,
The Mercury is opposed to the opening of Butler the slave trade, and as it has been widely quoted by the Republican press, we will give its reasons. The Mercury says :

"We object to making the re-opening of the clintoe, save trade an issue in the politics of the country, and for several reasons—
"Ist. Because if hereafter, and under other control, Crawford, er circumstances, it might be wise and safe to revive the trade, it is not now, in the present relationship of the Seuth and North.

"2d Because it is now impracticable and Eric."

"2d. Because it is now impracticable and idle. The idea is based upon entire ignorance and a visionary misconception of the relative positions of the North and South. No man who comprehends the antagonism of sentinant and political interest existing between the sections—no man who appreciates the division of opinion existing at the South—division of opinion existing at the South—Hamilton, can entertain the expectation of accomplishing the re-opening of this trade so long as this Union lasts. this Union lasts.

3d. Because it is a mischievous issue.—
Highland, Hocking, the subject on which there may well be a Holmes, difference of opinion without blame. It is Huron, no test of soundness to southern institutions.

Jackson, A.

no test of soundness to southern institutions. It lowers the moral position of the southern people from one of high principles of liberty in defense of valued rights to a mere question of policy about which we are profoundly divided. The great question of a section al President, elected by a party sworn to crush the South into provincial inferiority and social ruin, affords an issue upon which all carnest freemen of the South can rally."

If the proposition to re-open the slave trade be mischievous, unsafe, and dangerous, the agitation of minor questions of policy is fatal to them. If the south would desire to secure a fair share of political rights, she must leave quibbling alone, and unite with the national Democracy in the overthrow of Black Republicanism in 1860.
